INTRODUCTION

Dear Friends and Colleagues of the Southeastern Chapter:

It seems like only yesterday that our chapter was fighting for its life, threatened with elimination, evisceration and extinction. Unfortunately, I do not believe that the threat to our chapter has dissipated. In fact, I fear that the Electrical Apparatus Service Association has never faced a more challenging and perilous era in all of its history.

The movement to eliminate the chapters was not the "source" of this association's problems, but only a well-intentioned attempt to deal with the dangers that now confront us: a limping economy, a struggling industry, and a membership increasingly disinterested and distant. Those who tried to amputate the chapters did so because they believed it necessary for the health of the organization as a whole, but it was and is my belief that the key to our association's survival is found in the chapters themselves.

First, we must reach an understanding and establish who "owns" EASA and why does it exist. I believe that EASA is "owned" by its members, and that all authority wielded in its governance is derived from those members. And, simply put, the organization exists only to serve those members as defined in its fundamental documents. The members have the right to change those documents, set the association's policies, and even dissolve it if they so choose.

Second, we must rekindle the interest of those members in the health of their association by rejuvenating their sense of responsibility. How? By restoring their power to determine the organization's future. Isolating our members from the decision-making process has resulted in apathy and disinterest. In order to break that cycle, we must trust our membership with the responsibility that we ask them to shoulder. That responsibility, involvement and action must begin at the chapter level and move up to International ... it cannot work the other way around.

Finally, prodded by a reinvigorated membership, this association must change and evolve into a resource that will help its members survive the difficult times we are facing. I do not belittle the contributions that EASA already makes in that area, but just as the members have been warned that they must expand their services in order to survive; our association must find new ways to help our members and our industry survive.

It can be done. Let's see to it that it begins in the Southeastern Chapter!
